Ben Saxon works as a paediatric haematologist with a strong interest in transfusion practice at a tertiary paediatric and obstetric hospital. He also leads a team at the Australian Red Cross Blood Service who advise on transfusion policy and conduct transfusion education. The team produce numerous educational and practice enabling resources such as websites, apps, educational events, webinars and e-learning. We also partner with lead clinicians in hospitals to conduct clinical practice improvement initiatives, most recently around obstetric anaemia and iron deficiency.

Prior to his current appointments, Ben was trained in Australia and Canada. He has worked as a haematologist at the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto and as a medical director at the Canadian Blood Services.
